Patterson's Grocery Store Museum

Just like the good old days. Helps you understand what a shop was like 80 or 90 years ago when your great-grandparents shopped. Elderly people today can remember what it was like around the 1930s when they used to go to Patterson's for weekly groceries. Biscuits were loose in a tin with a picture of a girl on it to advertise them and, depending on how many you wanted to buy, were counted out and put in a paper bag. The broken ones and crumbs at the bottom of the tin were sold more cheaply. You could choose from different kinds of sweet lollipops displayed in different jars not wrapped up separately or have a bag of mixed hard-boiled lollies.

The museum is well stocked with over 4,000 items. Come and discover what it was like before refrigeration, plastic, and the modern electronic appliances we have today. The store building has been maintained in its original glory alongside a coffee shop next door where you can enjoy refreshments in an atmosphere just like the olden days. Suitable for families, small groups, and parties. Reservations may be required so please telephone in advance. Museum tickets are not required to visit the adjacent coffee shop.

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am a freelance photo journalist and would like to join the Goodwill Boat as a volunteer. I could offer workshops to your passengers on how to take effective photos and edit them, as well as how to create a digital photobook using videos. Furthermore, I could give a presentation on my experiences as a photo journalist in different countries. As you can see from my resume attached, I have experience in Afghanistan, Myanmar, and Sudan. In fact, in 2015, I received a special prize for my photos and the stories they conveyed about the problems of children in refugee camps.

At the same time, I would like to take photos for the purpose of having a photo exhibition sometime in the future to bring attention to poverty and suffering as a result of conflict as well as positive images of goodwill missions and activities such as those related to the Goodwill Boat projects.

I would be grateful if you could let me know at your earliest convenience if I could be a volunteer as such. Could you also please let me know the planned dates and itinerary for the next boat trip?

Many thanks in advance for considering my request.

Yours sincerely,
Mary Bates

Choices when shopping for food

Supermarkets must label their food products so that the buyers know where the ingredients are from including not just the geographical location but also the farming method. This helps shoppers make better decisions about the food they buy which also affects the producers.

When it comes to buying eggs in a supermarket, you can either buy free-range or cage-free eggs from hens that run around in an open grass space; or you can buy colony-caged eggs from hens grouped together in cages; or eggs from caged hens that are on their own in small cages. At first you will probably look at the price and you will no doubt be attracted to the lower-priced option of only $3.25 for example, for a dozen (twelve) standard caged eggs, compared to $4 for a dozen colony-caged eggs and $6 for cage-free eggs. Then, if you have a guilty conscience thinking about animal rights and feel sorry for caged hens living in a small space, you may opt for the more expensive eggs. Furthermore, the more expensive free-range eggs are better for your health as they are the most nutritious with more vitamins as the hens eat natural feed rather than artificial food which is fed to those in cages. The flavor of free-range eggs or cage-free eggs is also better as the hens eat grass and natural food outside in the sunlight. In fact, more and more supermarkets have decided to stop selling eggs from caged hens and caged-egg farmers are suffering as a result.

Similarly, when it comes to buying fish and meat, cheap prices should warn customers to think twice about where the food is from and how the animal or fish are raised. For example, a quick internet search on the difference between buying the more expensive wild salmon versus the cheaper farm-raised salmon warns consumers of how dangerous the latter is. Farm-raised salmon is very unhealthy for us because of the chemicals the fish are fed to make them grow fast. The same is true for animals such as pigs that are often raised in factory-like unnatural conditions that if you saw it with your own eyes you would probably never want to eat that kind of meat again no matter how cheap it was.

問 17 22

The main purpose of this passage is to

- ① inform shoppers about the price of different kinds of eggs.
- ② raise awareness of how animals are treated and food costs.
- ③ educate shoppers about genetically modified foods.
- ④ describe how animals are raised.

問 18 23

Which of the following is NOT true according to the passage?

- ① Shoppers should understand that cheap food is not always healthy.
- ② Labels on food are important to help shoppers make good buying decisions.
- ③ Supermarkets will always offer a choice of caged and cage-free eggs to buy.
- ④ The most expensive eggs taste better than the cheaper ones.

問 19 24

What can be concluded from the passage?

- ① Shopping affects animal rights.
- ② Supermarkets only consider their profits.
- ③ All eggs are equally nutritious.
- ④ Shoppers do not care about prices.

問 20 25

What would the writer of this passage probably buy?

- ① Farm-raised salmon
- ② Free-range eggs
- ③ Eggs costing $4
- ④ Cheap pork
