The Role of a Stunt Performer

Working as a stunt performer in television programs or movies is a grueling but rewarding occupation. Stunt performers often appear in action scenes involving vehicles, gunfights, hand-to-hand combat, fires, explosions and many other dangerous situations. A stuntman or stuntwoman's role is not necessarily limited to simply doing what directors instruct them to do. Stunt performers may devise action sequences, choreograph fight scenes, or utilize their knowledge of the military or explosives to help make action scenes appear more authentic and realistic.

We may not recognize the names or faces of many of the world's most talented stunt performers, but a stuntman or stuntwoman may get the chance to work as a 'stunt double' for a famous star and work with the entertainment industry's biggest names. The success of a production depends on its main actors being in good health and remaining injury and scar-free while filming and also for post-production promotion work. Employing stunt doubles means that the main cast members do not have to perform stunts for themselves, therefore avoiding accidents, injuries and taking time off from filming. Hold ups in the production schedule can be extremely costly for financing companies and might make the difference between overall profit or loss.

A stunt double is usually chosen for having similar height, build and features to the original actor. In recent years, special effects are being used more and more to simulate extremely dangerous stunts. This might seem a threat to the work of stunt performers, but one advantage of this technology is that stunt doubles now no longer need to look exactly like the original actors, because their physical characteristics can be visually altered with the use of computer-generated imagery (CGI).

Incidentally, although there are many stunt performers available, certain actors prefer to do their own stunts. Hong Kong's Jackie Chan and America's Tom Cruise are two examples of actors who perform many of their own stunts. It is part of their action star appeal and both actors continue to do very well at the box office despite their age; Chan currently at 65 and Cruise at 57 years of age. These actors are in the minority however, and they have special insurance policies in case they injure themselves and delay filming. As such, there will always be a huge demand for stunt performers in the entertainment industry: adventurous individuals who are prepared to take great risks but do not desire to take the limelight away from mainstream actors.

Notes

grueling	extremely tiring and demanding
choreograph	to plan and control
box office	the ticket sales of a film or stage production
limelight	the focus of public attention

問 18

According to the passage, dangerous scenes are...

- ① never performed by main cast members.
- ② always simulated with special effects.
- ③ sometimes planned by stunt performers.
- ④ usually the key to a production's success.

問 19

According to the passage, the entertainment industry requires that actors...

- ① perform their own stunts.
- ② have stunt training.
- ③ employ stunt performers for promotion work.
- ④ use stunt doubles for financial protection.

問 20

According to the passage, a stunt double...

- ① must have the same appearance as the original actor.
- ② should have served in the military.
- ③ usually receives little public attention.
- ④ cannot work in action movies when they become old.
